Veteran Politicians In Race

ROCKDALE

Two veterans of the Rockdale political front--former city manager N. E. Alford and former mayor L. C. Mehaffey--are the combatants in a spotlight race for mayor, a race that is likely to be Rockdale's chief topic of conversation until voters decide the winner on April 3. Incumbent Mayor Darral Walker is not seeking re-election.

Three Killed In Crash

ROSEBUD

Three persons met their deaths in a grinding two-car accident late last Sunday afternoon near Reagan on State Highway 6. One car was literally cut into two pieces. Two were dead at the scene and the third, who was enroute to Houston for cobalt treatments for cancer, died enroute to a Waco hospital. When the cars hit, one actually crashed through to the inside of the other.

Police To Try Compact

GEORGETOWN

Georgetown will be getting its first mini police car. The council is advertising for one compact and one full size patrol car. City manager Leo Wood said the force is using three tanks of gas a day now. One councilman asked about the "pursitability" of the compact and the police chief said "it's far superior to what we have now."

City Employs 'Youngsters'

BELTON

The City of Belton probably has created a new record for putting its young people to work. The council appointed a 25-year-old city judge and a 33-year-old city attorney at the March council meeting.

Dogwood Trail Is Ready

HEARNE

The dogwood trees on the Hearne-Wheelock road should reach their peak of beauty by this week. A large number of the trees were destroyed by fires several months ago, but the remainder of the trees are beautiful.

Hospital Fund Drive Opens

CALDWELL

The first stage of a fund drive for a new hospital complex for Caldwell began last week with the erection of a fund drive barometer on the lawn of the county courthouse. Goal for the drive is $100,000.

Bluebonnet Rescinds Rate Hike

SOMERVILLE

The board of directors of Bluebonnet Electric Cooperative last week voted to rescind the electric rate increase which they had previously approved to go into effect April 1. The action was taken after hearing a group of more than 100 protesting consumers present petitions opposing the increase at the board meeting held in Giddings.

Milam 4-H'er Honored

THORNDALE

Mary Lee Graham of Thorndale was one of three District 10 4-H'ers to be honored at the San Antonio Livestock Show and Rodeo. She received the Rural Youth Honor Award at the banquet held for the recipients and their families. She was also a guest of the rodeo at one of its performances.

Candidates Employ Anti-Washington Stance

By Robert Trautman

WASHINGTON

Reuter--Governor George Wallace of Alabama used to be alone in campaigning for the presidency on an anti-Washington platform, regularly attacking what he called the capital's "pointy-headed" bureaucrats.

This year, however, other candidates, both Democrat and Republican, are taking up this attack and they are finding it a potent vote-getter. The tenor of the argument is that Washington is not the solution to the country's ills, but their cause.

Taking this line, in addition to Wallace, are two former governors, Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Ronald Reagan of California.

They do not stress long experience in Washington, as candidates did in the past, but rather the fact they have no ties to it at all.

And the candidates with Washington ties don't stress them.

Even President Ford, in Washington for 27 years, is not above taking an anti-Washington stand: he assails Congress for inaction on key measures and for passing poor legislation, and the regulatory agencies for interfering in free enterprise.

Carter won 40 percent of the Democratic votes and Reagan, challenging the incumbent president in the Republican primary, captured 49 percent of the vote against Ford's 51.

Governor Wallace was alone among politicians when he first began assailing government in Washington as made up of "pointy-headed" bureaucrats who, he said, use their briefcases to carry peanut butter sandwiches.

Then, as now, he urges the people to vote for him if they want to "send Washington a message" that they don't like things the way they are.

But it wasn't until events of recent years that other candidates took up "anti-Washingtonism."

--Watergate, including President Nixon's resignation in disgrace and the criminal convictions of his senior aides, led to a feeling that Washington wasn't to be trusted.

--The U. S.-Soviet grain deal, which benefitted grain dealers but not the farmer and triggered higher food prices, led to a feeling that Washington cared more for special interest than the average American.

--Inflation and unemployment led to a feeling that Washington was incompetent to deal with the economy.

Campaigning politicians now more often than not talk about Washington as if it were a foreign country.

While Wallace continues to ask voters to send Washington "a message," Carter calls the situation in the capital a "mess," which he will clean up, and Reagan sees a "buddy" system there, with congressmen, bureaucrats and lobbyists working hand-in-hand to achieve their own ends.

Rhetoric is typically more extreme during primary campaigns when presidential hopefuls appeal to factions to support their bids for party nominations, but "anti-Washingtonism" is likely to continue into the general election campaign this fall.

Watergate, Soviet grain and the recession aside, there has been a growing feeling that the answers to the country's problems are not to be found in Washington, if they ever could.

The solutions first proposed by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt 45 years ago, do not work, the new feeling is, and the country's problems must be taken up by local governments.

Former President Nixon felt that revenue sharing, where federal funds are returned to local communities for use on programs of their own choice, was one of his chief accomplishments in office.

More and more candidates today are accepting the argument that Washington is not the panacea once thought.

The emerging thinking is that local governments, knowing local problems, can better deal with them than bureaucrats--"pointy-headed" or not--sitting thousands of miles away in Washington.

Whether this thinking has been spurred on by Governor Wallace's strident rhetoric or not, the feeling is now that power, as well as money, must be diffused out of Washington and into the countryside.

FOLLOW THE LEADER--And the leader in this case is chief process engineer Bob Seymour, right, who points out various production techniques and products to these student visitors at Alcoa's Rockale Works. They were part of a 35-person delegation from the regional, student chaper of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers holding a conference at Texas A&M University.

Report Due Tuesday On Audit

Milam County commissioners will meet in a special called session Tuesday at 2 p.m. to hear from Ray Harris, CPA of Sinton, who will report on the county's proposed audit.

Harris will arrive Monday morning to check county records and then will give an oral report to commissioners and an estimate of the cost at the meeting.

This was announced at Thursday's regular court meeting by County Judge O. B. Harden.

In other business, court discussed possible site and size of a storage room to be built to house courthouse mowers, gasoline and tools, which are now stored in the courthouse basement. The storeroom will also house a washer and dryer to be used for the jail.

Judge Harden said brick matching the new jail should be used for construction, with the county acting as its own contractor. The item was tabled for study and commissioners also, after the meeting, looked the jail grounds over for a site for the room.

Commissioners discussed changes in voting places, which must be approved by the state before the general election, and heard reports from county officials for February.

They also discussed, with no action taken, the offer by T. A. Koehler to spray courthouse pecan trees for webworms. Harden said this may be turned over to the Extension Service.

Tickets On Sale For Scout Fair

Tickets are on sale by Scouts in the Cameron, Rockdale, and Rosebud area for the big Scout Fair to be held Saturday, March 20 from 2-5 p.m. at Simon-George Hall, located on South Karnes.

Theme for this year's fair, in conjunction with the nation's Bicentennial, is "Spirit of '76--Our Heritage."

Tickets are $1 per person, with children under 8 being admitted free when accompanied by an adult. Tickets are available from Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts, adult leaders, and will be sold at the door on the day of the fair.

Each unit gets a commission off the tickets they sell, and this money is used locally by the troops or packs, according to Ben Campbell, district scout execuive.

Representatives from Scout and Cub units are expected from Rockdale, Cameron, and Rosebud; and possibly Franklin and Lott.

We Apologize Twice

We are happy to make a correction to a story concerning Robert Mann's being chosen as a semifinalist in the White House Fellowship program. Mann is head of the journalism department at SMU, not the acting head.

Another correction for the school candidate story in Thursday's Herald: Buckholts school district has five people running for three regular terms and one candidate, Ray Harris, running for an unexpired term.

3-Car Collision Damages Vehicles

Heavy damage was inflicted to vehicles in a three-car accident at 12th and Washington about 7 p.m. Wednesday but no injuries were reported.

Most heavily damaged was a car driven by Mrs. Minta Miller of Cameron which was traveling on Washington and attempted a right turn into 12th. At the same time a car driven by Wesley Crouch was attempting a left turn onto Washington from 12, and a pickup driven by Mark Michalka of Cameron was traveling west on 12th.

All three collided, with resulting damage to the front end of the Miller and Michalka vehicles and minor damage to the Crouch car.

Alcoa Expects 30% Increase In Shipments

Aluminum industry shipments in 1976 are expected to increase 30 percent over depressed 1975 levels, shareholders have been told in Aluminum Company of America's annual report.

In their letter to shareholders, W. H. Krome George, board chairman and chief executive officer, and William B. Renner, president, said, "A recent definite upswing in aluminum orders would seem to indicate that the large excess aluminum inventories accumulated by our customers in 1974 have been largely worked down to normal levels. Their shipments and ours are beginning to improve with the economic recovery."

A 30 percent increase, they said, would make 1976 the third highest shipping year in the industry's history.

George and Renner reported that Alcoa plans 1976 capital expenditures of about $272 million on several thousand projects.

Nerve Ends Of Uncertainty...

Eric Hoffer, the West Coast philosopher, himself a rugged man as well as philosopher, said:

So what Hoffer speaks to is bluffing for lack of constancy or confidence.

The MARC Van...

The van idea which is used to haul elderly people from rural areas to Cameron and Rockdale is being adapted by the Milam Association for Retarded Children.

A regular route for daily run through Cameron, Thorndale, and Milano and back from the Rockdale center is being developed. Aid from the Brenham State School is furnishing the vehicle and driver.

People desiring to send youngsters needing MARC services should contact the MARC Center, Rockdale, writing or calling MARC board member Bobbie Jansky.

MARC also is now eligible to purchase government surplus commodities.

What Others Say

A Quiet Little War...

The history of this century is studded with quiet little conflicts that proceeded without much general notice while others involving Great Power interests captured the headlines. There is a current example: the civil war in Portuguese Timor which, since it began in August, has taken a toll of about 60,000 lives.

The magnitude of this can be better understood if one reflects that this is substantially more than the number of Americans killed during all our years in Vietnam. Sixty thousand dead--and most of them, it is reported, women and children on both sides.

As so often happens, "independence" is the battle cry in this struggle for control of an island in the Indonesian archipelago. Whether "independence" in this context was worth the sacrifice of 60,000 people is open to question.

The eastern half of the island of Timor has been a Portuguese colony. A group called the Revolutionary Front for Independent East Timor (Fretelin) opposes those favoring union with Indonesia, which controls the western half.

As matters now stand, a provisional government spokesman claims that "the war is virtually over" and pro-Indonesian forces will have everything under control within a few weeks. The Fretelin side takes a different view: its remnants in the hills and jungles vow to wage a guerrilla war for independence, and the United Nations is besought for help.

It is a quiet little war. Not much is said about it in the press, while the progress of the more exciting conflict in Angola is reported daily. But Timor's quiet little war has killed 60,000 so far, mostly women and children betwen the hostile forces. The chances are that many more will die before it's over. But don't expect to hear much about that. Like some other quiet little wars, this one goes on almost unnoticed by the world at large.

Free Speech, Assembly

By Alan Barth

Editor's Note: This is the 10th in a series of 18 articles written for the nation's Bicentennial and exploring themes of the American Issues Forum. In this article, the first of four dealing with "certain unalienable rights," Alan Barth discusses the importance of free speech and assembly to a free society and the limits that have, in fact, been imposed on the exercise of these basic freedoms.

COURSES BY NEWSPAPER was developed by the University of California Extension, San Diego, and funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Copyright 1975 by the Regents of the University of California.

On a summer day in 1963, thousands of Americans from every part of the nation gathered on the long mall leading up to the Lincoln Memorial. They sang "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah" and demanded fulfillment of the promise for which Lincoln lived and died. In unison they chanted, "We shall overcome. . ."

But it was to the Congress of the United States at the other end of the Mall, not to the symbol of Lincoln, that this living petition was addressed. The demonstrators were exercising two of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the First Amendment to the Constitution--the right to speak freely and the right to assemble peaceably and petition for a redress of grievances. Their object was the passage of a comprehensive civil rights bill designed to assure first-class citizenship to black men and women. Early in the following year, Congress transformed the bill into the law of the land.

The rights of free speech and assembly are not always exercised so decorously, nor are they always recognized as rights by the police and others in authority. On May Day of 1971 another great throng of Americans--most of them students and other young persons--assembled in the Capitol to protest against continuance of the war in Vietnam. Thirteen thousand of them were arrested and imprisoned--indiscriminately, illegally, and often brutally--in the largest mass arrest in American history. On September 4, 1974, however, a United States District Court declared all of the arrests unconstitutional and ordered that all arrest records stemming from this May day demonstration should be destroyed.

The freedoms of speech and assembly assured by the First Amendment (together with freedom of the press, to be discussed in the next article) are the considerations essential to the theory of self-government embodied in the United States Consitution. As James Madison put it, "the people, not the government, possess the absolute sovereignty."

THE ESSENTIAL DIFFERENCE

The First Amendment, according to Madison, who is generally credited with having drafted it, consituted the "essential difference between the British Government and the American Constitution." In England, after the civil wars of the 1640s, absolute sovereignty was transferred from the monarch to Parliament, not to the people. And, in theory at least, the will of Parliament was supreme. No fundamental written charter enumerated and limited the powers of Parliament as the American Bill of Rights limited the powers of the United States Congress.

In authoritarian countries where ultimate power resides in a party, an oligarchy or a dictator, freedom of expression hardly exists at all. Rulers are rarely hospitable to criticism or challenge. Lacking these correctives, they may, through error of judgment, plunge a nation into catastrophe--as Adolf Hitler, in hardly more than a decade, plunged his thousand-year Reich. In a democracy, however, where popular sovereignty prevails, freedom of expression is the dynamo of the political process. The men who wrote the First Amendment believed that it was less risky to permit the expresion of ideas--even of ideas considered dangerous and disloyal--than to enforce silence. They believed that national unity grew out of resolved conflict, no conformity. In the long run, they believed, the most efficient government was the one constantly obliged to justify its actions and to meet the challenge of competing proposals.

Freedom of assembly or association--freedom to join hands with like-minded fellow-citizens for the advancement of common purposes--is an inseparable consort of free expression. Men are best able to make themselves heard in a large community if they speak in unison.

Alexis de Tocqueville, that astute French critic of the American system in its early years, remarked: "The most natural privilege of man, next to the right of acting for himself, is that of combining his exertions with those of his fellow-creatures, of acting in common with them." And he offered another canny observation about the usefulness of this freedom: "In countries where associations are free, secret societies are unknown. In America, there are numerous factions, but no conspiracies."

The eminent jurist, Judge Learned Hand, summed up the idea very simply: "The first Amendment presupposes that right conclusions are more likely to be gathered out of a multitude of tongues than through any kind of authoritative selection. To many this is, and always will be, folly; but we have staked upon it our all."

The wisdom of the choice may be measured by the frequency with which we have seen dissenting opinions eventually prevail and minority views become the opinion of the majority. American intervention in Vietnam, for example, opposed in its early stages by no more than a vociferous minor fraction of the country, is now overwhelmingly looked upon as a monumental national blunder. Time and advancing knowledge and changes in the conditions of life produce unforeseeable alterations in fashion, in morals, in social values, even in political convictions; yesterday's hearsay may well become tomorrow's orthodoxy.

LIMITS OF FREE SPEECH

The theory of free speech and assembly has not always been honored in practice in the United States. It is sobering to recall the First Amendment had hardly been ratified before the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 were adopted by a Congress fearful that the radical ideas of the French Revolution would subvert a young Republic conceived and brought to birth in revolution.

The prevailing test for the limits of free speech is what has come to be known as "the clear and present danger" standard formulated by Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., in 1919 (Schenck v. United States). "The question in every case," he wrote, "is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent. It is a question of proximity and degree."

Justice Holmes argued eloquently in subsequent dissenting opinions for a liberal and tolerant application of this standard to protect "the expression of opinions that we loathe and believe to be fraught with death, unless they so imminently threaten immediate interference with the lawful and the pressing purposes of the law that an immediate check is required to save the county." And his great associate, Justice Louis D. Brandeis, reminded Americans in memorable words that the authors of the Constitution regarded free speech not as a mere luxury to be enjoyed only in untroubled times but as a source of strength urgently needed in times of great national strain.

But in the years following the second world war these pleas were powerless against a widespread fear that subversive ideas from overseas--this time from the Russian Revolution--would sap the loyalty of Americans to their own institutions and their own country. So, again, Congress adopted measures seriously restricting free speech and assembly. Congressional investigating committees staged what amounted to virtual trials of persons for expressing "subversive" opinions or associating with those suspected of harboring them. They punished people by publicity for offenses not punishable by law.

The most blatant, if not the worst, of these inquisitorial bodies was the Senate subcommittee headed by Senator Joseph McCarthy, who conducted it as a kind of private, roving kangaroo court. He brought a new word, "McCarthyism," in the language, making it a synonym for overbearing political persecution, until, at last, he was censured by the Senate in 1954 for affronting its dignity. And in more recent days, as we have lately learned, the government carried on a pervasive and intimidating surveillance of anyone suspected of political non-conformity.

Freedom of speech and assembly have been buffeted from the left as well as from the right. University students, who might be presumed to know better, have undermined civil liberty by shouting down the expression of any ideas with which they disagree. The real boundaries of free speech have been left, therefore, in limbo; and no one can define them today with any certainty.

Does America truly want free trade in ideas? Do Americans possess sufficient tolerance to grant a hearing to ideas "they loathe and believe to be fraught with death?" Do the most unpopular ideas deserve a hearing? Upon the answer to these questions depends the shape of future freedom in America.

LUSAKA

Western intelligence sources here report that Cuban troops and Soviet T-34 tanks have landed at the Mozambique port of Beira. No further details were available here and the sources said they only had confirmation that one shipload had been sighted last month. The sources added that their arrival increased the possibility that the Soviet Union might start helping black Rhodesian guerrillas to fight the white minority.

VIENNA

Connoisseurs of Viennese theatre are debating whether to label the city's largest production grand opera, tragedy or just plain farce. Whatever the category, the rotten eggs have started flying and the principal actors are taking cover behind the footlights. Directors, actors, musicians, and the rest of the 3,500 employees are also coming in for boos and whistles from the gallery.

NEW YORK

The blind date, a product of American ingenuity, may soon become a victim of its technology, with the advent of a system in which people choose prospective partners after seeing them in videotaped interviews. And that's not all. Soon, creators of the system, called Videodate, hope to broadcast the interviews on cable television to entire cities.

NEW YORK

Foreigners have ben pouring money into U.S. stocks, helping fuel a bull market that has generated breath-taking volume records since the new year. While the extent of the foreign participation has not been calculated, it is generally believed on Wall Street that foreigners playe a significant role in the 1976 rally that has seen the Dow Jones Industrial Index reach the 1,000 mark.

PARIS

Earthquakes are the most spectacular natural disasters known to man, but the best way of limiting the death and destruction they cause is good building rather than dramatic predictions of the time and place they will occur. That was the general conclusion of 150 earthquakes experts who met here recently to find ways of combatting the violent tremors which have killed an average of 15,000 people a year in this century and made millions more homeless.

NIAMEY

Niger, which has one of the biggest energy bills in West Africa, is finding ways to solve its problems within its own borders. Probably the biggest project under way is exploitation of recently-discovered deposits of coal near Agades, about 800 miles from here, as fuel for a new power station. Until now, power station s in this poor, land-locked country have relied on expensive imported oil.

TIPS FOR OUTDOORSMEN

by Vern Sanford

LANTERN LURES FISH—Try this trick for some fast crappie and perch action at night. Rig a gas-mantle lantern four or five feet above the water and about 20 feet from the shoreline. The light will attract bugs and fish. The bugs will fly against the lantern and then drop stunned on the water. These floating bugs then will stir the perch and crappie into wild feeding.

FISH HIDEAWAY—Cleaning some big logs off your lake front property? Don't burn them or have them hauled away. Instead attach some weights and sink them in the lake. They will form a haven and hiding place for small bait fish which in turn will lure those big lunker bass almost to your doorstep. Be sure to sink the logs in deep water where they will be no menace to boating.

WHITE REFLECTS LIGHT—Don't fret about cleaning the mud or dirt splotches off your hunting coat. A dirty coat will aid you in blending better with surrounding marsh foliage. Also, skip shaving before a duck hunt. A clean-shaven upturned face can stand out enough to spook incoming ducks.

Soccer Catching On As New American Sport

By Jack Cavanaugh

NEW YORK, Reuter--It may never match baseball, football, and basketball in the eyes of most American sports fans, but soccer finally seems to have caught on in the United States both as a spectator and participant sport.

Regarded for years as an ethnic sport whose low-scoring made it anathema to the average sports buff here, soccer is in the midst of an unprecedented boom in North America with the major thrust being manifested in national youth program.

Despite the existence of two professional leagues, the game poses no immediate threat to baseball, football, basketball, and hockey as a strong competitor for America's sports dollar.

But it is on the threshold of becoming a major sport, in large part because of the signing of international stars like Pele and George Best and the development ofhome-grown talent.

Indeed,Philip Woosnam, the transplanted Welshman who is the commissioner of the North American Soccer League, believes that by 1986 the U. S. will become the hub of the game throughout the world.

"By that time I feel that our league will have become the strongest in the world and that we will have developed a national team capable of winning the world cup," Woosnam told Reuter.

Woosnam's sanguine outlook is predicated on the development of Burgeoning American stars who, in their mid and late teens, already have shown themselves capable of holding their own with their European counterparts.

At present, the 20-team North American Soccer League (which outranks its older rival, the American Soccer League in talent and attendance) has had to rely mainly on imported players. In all, about 65 percent of the league's players are from Europe and South America. Many of them are under contract with foreign teams, playing in the U. S. on a "loan" basis.

But the dymamic Woosnam, a former player and coach, predicts that by 1984 90 percent of the league's players will be Americans and Canadians.

The league's progress has been shaky to say the least. An off-shoot of the National Professional Soccer League and the U. S. Association (both now defunct), the NASL began in 1968 with 17 teams. It also had a network television contract, a requisite to success in American sports.

But its television ratings were disastrous and, after one season, the Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS) did not renew its contract. Besides losing its lucrative TV contract, the league also lost 12 franchises the next year when it operated with only five teams. But it grew to nine teams in 1973, added six more in 1974, and finally, grew to its present complement of 20 lastyear.

If nothing else, the TV exposure (which has been resumed on a limited scale) did serve to kindle the interest of many American youngsters who took to the game by the thousands.

Speedway Opens Races June 6

The Texas 500, a 250 lap battle around the World's Fastest Speedway by late model stock cars will take place at Texas World Speedway in College Station on Sunday, June 6. The United States Auto Club will sanction the event. Application has been made to ACCUS (the American arm of international motor sports) for a full international listing of the event which will allow drivers of all other sanctioning bodies to compete.

Practice will start on Friday afternoon, June 4, with qualifications for the 40 starting berths taking place on Saturday, June 5. Texans A. J. Foyt of Houston, and Johnny Rutherford of Fort Worth are expected to battle defending 1975 champion Ramo Stott and four time champion Butch Hartman. Stott most recently sat on the pole for the Daytona 500, where he and Foyt battled it out before mechanical malfunctions forced them out of the race.

This will be the fourth running of the Texas 500 at Texas World Speedway. The last event was a thrilling spectacle in which A. J. Foyt, Richard Petty, and Buddy Baker were side by side, three abreast on the high banks after the first 494 miles. One the last lap, Petty got caught in traffic and finished just twenty feet behind Baker, who nipped Foyt by two feet at the finish.

The Texas 500 will be the major event of the USAC Stock Car Championship which wasn't decided last year until the last race of the season. Dick King, director of USAC said, "We are pleased to sanction the Texas 500 and are very happy to have it as the opening event at Texas World Speedway, which is one of the most exciting race tracks in the country."

In making the announcement of the opening event, Richard C. Conole, Speedway president, said, "We are proud to bring a major auto race to Texas. Some of the best drivers and cars in the world will be here for the Texas 500. Texans who have never experienced it before will have an opportunity to witness the thrills and excitment that fans experience in Daytona.

The twin 150 mile Stock and Indy car races originially listed as tentative on the USAC schedule for April 4, will be run on August 1.

Tickets for the Texas 500 go on sale March 1, and are priced from $5 to $20. Tickets are available by writing Texas World Speedway, P.O. Box AJ, College Station, TX 77840.

Rodeo Club Applications Due Soon

March 31 is the deadline for applications for membership in the State and National High School Rodeo Association, according to Wilma Lewis, Temple Junio College Rodeo Club sponsor.

Students who want to participate in the Region III rodeo for high school students must be members of the association, she said.

Applications must be filed 30 days prior to the rodeo with the association's state secretary, Paul Cook, P. O. Box 302, Hallettsville, Tex. 77964.

The Region III event will be April 30, May 1 and 2 in Temple. Winners will advance to the State Championship Rodeo June 15-19 in Hallettsville.

When shag rugs become limp from too many washings, lay them on a flat surface right side down, brush strong liquid starch over the entire backing and let dry.

Cats Nip Yoemen

The Cameron Yoemen lost to the Temple Wildcats Wednesday afternoon in a 7-1 battle that was highlighted by Ken Rieger's and Ricky Kalkbrenner's hits and pitches.

Cameron's only run came in the bottom of the seventh as Donald Komar singled and stole second and raced home on a single by Steve Hollas.

NO, YOU haven't had "one too many" and you probaly don't need your glasses changed. Detailed Study Planned For Waters

A detailed study of bottom conditions in all state-owned waters has been launched by the Bureau of Economic Geology at The University of Texas.

The project calls for mapping sediment distribution and faults in Texas' submerged lands of the Gulf of Mexico (out of 10.2 miles) and in bays and estuaries from the Rio Grande to the Sabine River.

The data will help in evaluating the impact of deepwater ports and the development of oil and gas in federal areas, for example, and in understanding such natural processesas shoreline erosion, hurricane effects and filling - in of dredged channels.
